Does your research involve Artificial Intelligence (AI)?

The increasing interest in research involving artificial intelligence (AI) adds a new dimension to individuals who work with human subjects and the many people responsible for human subjects protections, including your research team members. Weill Cornell Medicine provides a multitude of educational resources for our research community, including a subscription to CITI webinars. We recommend all research team members who engage in research involving AI to take the following to ensure they are up-to-speed on AI and human subjects protections:

Artificial Intelligence and Human Subjects Protections

This webinar explores the current protections, regulatory elements, and ethics tools associated with protecting human subjects in light of AI research, including a discussion of their current limitations. The webinar concludes with some suggestions regarding shaping policy of and providing education on AI research with human subjects.

For a full list of all the webinars offered through WCM’s CITI All-Webinar Access subscription, please visit their course listing page— if you see something you’d like that is not listed as an option in our “Add a Course” questionnaire, please reach out to hrpo@med.cornell.edu to request it!
